2011 Macquarie Group Sydney Royal Wine Show

Just four years after it was founded in 1822, the Agricultural Society of NSW awarded a medal to Gregory Blaxland for the best sample of Australian wine. This award was possibly the first time that an award had been given for an Australian wine, and a farsighted recognition of the part that wine was to play in the agricultural development of Australia. Ever since, wine has played a significant part in the Sydney Royal competitions, attracting around 300 exhibitors in 60 different classes, ensuring for the winners recognition and a valuable opportunity to shine the spotlight on their wines.

Sydney Royal represents a stellar history and tradition of champions from the early competitions in the 1800s to the modern day. While the competition structure and award criteria have been refined and improved, a medal win still embodies impartial judging standards, outstanding quality assessment and world class analysis. The Macquarie Group Sydney Royal Wine Show is not only committed to awarding the best of the best, but also ensuring the level of quality is maintained in the years to come particularly through education initiatives.
